The UNTDs are members of the youngest branch of one of the youngest navies in the world. Yet in a few short years, like the navy as a whole, they have in their own way created an outstanding record. Not that cadets can be expected to contribute in any direct way to the record of the navy in the “cold peace” of today, but rather to create a spirit and keep alive a certain attitude which must be typical of a good naval reserve.

By participation in some of the events which concern the navy as a whole, cadets take the responsibility of being public relations officers, both at home and abroad. Each cruise, each contact with other services and countries, and each activity of summer training, is such an event. The spirit which motivates their conduct at such times can only be partly spontaneous. It is as much made as born.

Now for the first few years of its inception, the UNTD was regarded by a number of its members as a sort of glorified Sea Cadets or Boy Scouts, a free ride at navy (and taxpayer's) expense. This attitude has, in some ways, changed and we hope that cadets now and in the future will regard their stint in the navy as, not just another job, or an all-expense-paid tour of foreign ports, but as an avocation. For what the best of the former cadets brought to their tasks, we must bring also. We must bring the interest and care of the dedicated non-professional, the amateur in the best sense of the word.

What has all this got to do with tradition? with discipline? with a love of the sea? with “conduct becoming to an officer and a gentleman”? Just this – it is a part of them all, as they are integral parts of it, a spirit which can be expressed but scantily in such words as “morale”, “courage”, “discipline”, “tradition”. None of these must die. This is not mere advocacy of the status quo as such; but it is the motivating force which gives to these words more than a name. It gives them a meaning.

GUIDE

BOOK

INTRODUCTION

This Guide Book is designed to acquaint all Seagoing Officers and men with the Port of St. John's, and contains in brief an outline of the base organizations and facilities of the City in general.

It is hoped that it will help all concerned to become more familiar with the advantages the Port has to offer, and that in some small way, it may serve in making their visits here more pleasurable.
